Firing From a Vessel 12,000 Yards Distant

It was later that the correspondents heard that Germany intended to hold them as hostages for the safety of German ships in American harbors. After his first talk with Gerard Count Montgelas returned again to the Embassy and continued to urge the signing of a treaty.

Gerard persisted in his refusal and even declined to communicate the German proposal to Washington unless he was permitted confidential communication-presumably in code. Count Montgelas refused this per-

SAID HE'D SIT STILL TILL KINGDOM COME.

It was apparently after these fruitless interviews with the unyielding American Ambassador that German police took up passports of American correspondents, financiers, Red Cross workers and plain citizens. These Americans came to Gerard and told him unless he asked the Foreign Office to allow them to depart on the Embassy train they would be forced to remain for probably months.

Gerard promptly communicated with Count Montgelas, but the correspondents and other Americans did not receive their passports until just 3 four hours before the Eml ssy train left Saturday night.

Gerard and his party entered neutral Switzerland triumphantly-in gala spirit. The Americans were delighted to leave the stress and tension of Berlin for the quiet non-war atmosphere of Switzerland. Only champagne could do honor to such a celebration as this leaving behind of Berlin's tension-and champagne was brought out. In this the Americans toasted Switzerland and her hospitality, as they crossed the border from Germany into Swiss territory.

GERARD OFFICIALLY RECEIVED.

Arriving at Schaffhausen, the first Swiss city after leaving German territory, the special train was met by American Minister Stovall and Col. Bruegge and Major Swirep, the latter two officers representing the Swiss Government. They bade Gerard and his fellow Americans welcome to Switzerland and extended every possible courtesy to the party.

Gerard remained several hours in Zurich when that city was reached later in the day, and then departed with his staff to Berne.

The general feeling of Americans left in Berlin was expressed by the young son of Davis Maddy: "If I ever get my feet on American soi again I'll never take them off."

Gerard appeared worn out to-day, not only from the journey from Berlin but from the strain of the past events. He plans to remain here for a few days and will then journey to Paris, from there going to Spain For the voyage to America.
